

The deregulations about to take place starting June 3rd are appalling.
It is all ready too bad that there exists an oligarchy of media discourse (to use Michel Foucault's term).
Soon there will be a monarchy of corportate propagation telling us what SUV to drive, which fast food we should eat (does it matter, since it is all Pepsico?) and what music to listen to.
Your deregulations will have a homogenizing effect on what could be diversity and difference.
There will be no more possibility of creating a sense of new life.
Instead, life will all be the same under the rubric of AOL's illusion of difference.
It may be too late to alter your decision, but it is important that you realize the consequences of allowing giant corporations to run media instead of promoting otherness. Nothing.
